Start with the person

We consider strengths, wishes, communication, daily support needs and risks alongside the environment and existing residents. Availability is the starting point for a discussion; suitability is established through assessment.

Discuss a potential referral

Send a brief anonymised profile to admin@pearlconnexions.co.uk or call 07470 906740. We will discuss fit, capacity and next steps.

Service information: October 2026. Availability and service arrangements are confirmed at referral stage.

Choose the environment around the person.

Use this comparison to begin a placement discussion. Staffing, compatibility, facilities and any personal care requirements are assessed individually.

Planned children's home: application resubmission intended for October 2026. Opening is subject to Ofsted registration; this is not a current placement offer.

Service scope: supported living and supported accommodation have different purposes. Any requirement for personal care must be considered explicitly against the relevant service's registration and delivery arrangements.

Stability creates room for progress.

Support is built around the person's abilities, priorities and communication. A diagnosis or risk history alone does not determine suitability.

Understand the person first

Subject to assessment and service scope, we consider referrals involving learning disabilities, autism, mental health needs, trauma and complex support needs. We explore what the person already manages, what helps them feel safe and where support is needed.

Turn education and work goals into practical steps

For people outside education, employment or training, we explore the barriers behind disengagement. Support may include routines, travel practice, applications, CVs, interview preparation and sustained engagement.

An additional route into learning

The Levi AP partnership offers a potential route to Functional Skills where appropriate. Individual eligibility, availability and delivery arrangements are discussed before this is included in a placement plan.

Keep contextual safeguarding within the plan

Where exploitation, peer relationships, offending concerns or bail conditions affect safety, we work with the relevant social care, youth justice, police, health and education professionals. Staff support appointments, accessible explanations of expectations and early sharing of concerns.

Prepare staff for the individual

Training and supervision focus on communication, sensory needs, predictable routines, trauma-informed responses, safeguarding and de-escalation. Person-specific preparation complements learning disability and autism training, including Oliver McGowan training as applicable to staff roles.

The practical aim: a workable daily routine, safer relationships and achievable next steps that matter to the person.

Make progress visible.

A structured life-skills programme for care leavers and young people aged 16+, used where appropriate to the individual's goals and needs.

From starting point to next goal

We establish a baseline with the person, agree priorities and translate them into practical key work. Reviews consider what has changed, what support is still needed and which goals should come next.

Life-skill area	What the work explores
Emotional regulation	Recognising feelings, coping strategies and resilience.
History and identity	Personal background, identity and what matters to the person.
Relationships and social skills	Trust, boundaries and safer relationships.
Future planning and hope	Aspirations, realistic goals and next steps.
Self-care, health and daily living	Personal routines, wellbeing and healthy choices.
Education, employment and training	Learning, participation and preparation for work.
Communication	Expressing needs, preferences and seeking help.
Behaviour management	Understanding triggers, responses and safer alternatives.
Decision-making and problem-solving	Considering choices, consequences and practical solutions.
Independence skills	Budgeting, household tasks and preparation for independent living.

Evidence commissioners can discuss: the starting point, the person's goals, work completed, examples of skills demonstrated, level of staff help and agreed next actions. Progress is considered alongside wellbeing and safety, rather than a score alone.

A clear plan before the move.

A responsive referral process should still establish suitability, responsibilities and a support model everyone understands.

01 Review the referral

Consider needs, strengths, wishes, legal arrangements, risks, service scope and missing information.

02 Speak with the professional network

Clarify the current plan, placement history, desired outcomes and what has helped or proved difficult.

03 Meet the person and assess compatibility

Arrange assessment and a viewing wherever practicable. Consider communication, preferences, geography, contextual risks and existing residents.

04 Agree the offer and transition

Set out the proposed support, staffing, costs, responsibilities and start arrangements. Confirm the required documents and contractual agreement before admission.

05 Review the early experience

Check the person’s experience, emerging needs and whether support is working. Agree changes with the relevant professionals and record responsibility for actions.

Where an initial assessment period is proposed

Its duration, staffing and review date should be agreed for that individual. Observations should distinguish skills already present from support needed, including when additional staff input is necessary. A review informs the ongoing package; staffing changes are not automatic.

A placement discussion with a clear next step.

We welcome enquiries from commissioners, social workers, leaving care teams and other relevant professionals.

What to send first

Start with an anonymised profile: age, preferred area, required start date, communication needs, support requirements, key risks and intended outcomes. Please agree a secure route before sending identifiable assessments or sensitive records.

What we will discuss

Potential fit, current capacity, missing information, assessment arrangements and the basis of a proposed package. Staffing and costs are discussed against the individual's needs and the service's scope.

What ongoing partnership should look like

Named responsibilities, agreed communication and review arrangements, progress against personal goals, and early discussion of emerging concerns. The person's views should inform assessment, key work, reviews and changes to their support.

When difficulties arise

Staff identify changes and escalate concerns for management review. The response considers the person's account, immediate safety, risk and support plans, and the wider professional network. Actions and follow-up are recorded so changes can be checked.
